Moulding The Licks

In our final lesson we will be taking the licks we have learnt in this solo and making them our own. This is the process that all great blues players go through whilst developing their own style and sound on the guitar. We learn the solo, taking inspiration from great players, then we take the ideas, break them down and rebuild them in our own style. You can cut the lick in 2, 3, 4 or more sections, you can change the rhythm, you can jump from one bit to another... You can basically do anything you want with them until they feel like your own and they are in your fingers!

More on this process...

If you want to dive a little deeper on the process of learning licks, and making them your own, we highly recommend taking the "How To Learn Licks" Challenge course alongside this blues course!

How To Learn Licks

Challenges

So, use the backing track for this song to try this out for yourself! Take one or two of your favourite licks and try to follow what Dan does in the video. It's great fun and an important part of the blues learning process!

There we have the first unit done! Don't rush into the next unit, really take your time with this track. Use the interactive player to slow down the song and get it as solid as you can. The next unit will be waiting for you when you're ready!
