The Interface

At this point, we're moving onto the computer-based home studio set-up. This, therefore, asks the question:

"Do you want a computer at the heart of your home set up? If not, you don't need to worry about this!"

However, if the answer is yes, we need to now establish how we get the guitar into your computer! We need an audio interface to convert your audio signal into a digital signal. There are hundreds of these out there, and we're not here to tell you which to use, just simply that you do need one.

With the interface setup, you now have a direct route from guitar to computer. Once you have that, you'll need a way to hear back your guitar. You have two options, speakers or headphones. Or both. We'd recommend a set of studio monitors or headphones which are totally balanced. It's different to a set of "beats" or hi-fi speakers, which dramatically change the EQ to have heavier bass etc... Balanced speakers have flat EQ which means that you hear the guitar as it really is. You can edit the EQ yourself later!
