Re-Bends!

So we'll start of with the simple yet tricky to execute "re-bend"! This is simply when you bend one note and then bend it again without picking it a second time. Let's start with the most simple way to approach this as possible, which is a simple tone bend up and tone bend up again, like this:

The brackets indicate that the note is not picked again.

So in this case the bend goes up, down and then goes up again without being picked twice.

“ It can really help having a jam track on in the background to help you get the

The useage of this technique gives us yet another tool in our soloing toolbox, and can help start to add more expression to your playing. In the exercise we'll work on today, I have broken it down into 4th notes bends, 8th note, 16th note and even a 32nd note re-bend! You can see that if you practice all of these you have multiple ways to add more life into your bends and therefore your soloing skills. Let's look at that full exercise:

♩ = 120

So take your time working with all of this
types of re-
bend, and I would suggest trying to apply them

to your improvisation
before moving on.
These alone
can be super powerful in elevating
your lead
playing!
